NIK
CASSAN
2017

Hi. My name is Brad Carter and I've been making prank phone calls for nearly all of my life, which is a little embarrassing since I'm approaching 50, but I wouldn't change it for anything. The prank call community has introduced me to some of the coolest, weirdest, most creative individuals I've ever known and caused me to become life-long friends with a few of them.

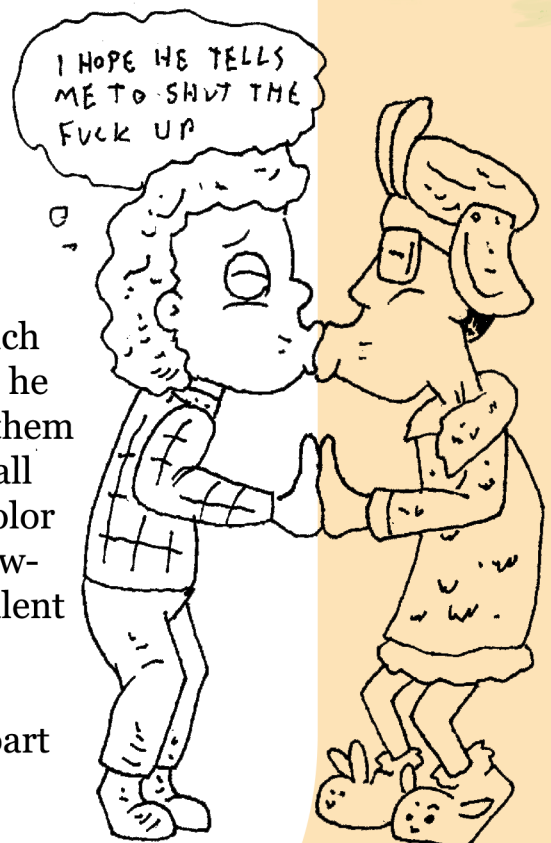

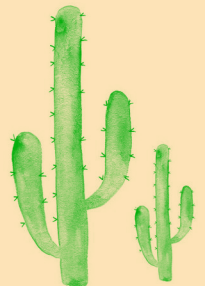

Back in 2012 or so, I started noticing drawings of my phone calls popping up on various social media of the time, drawn by a guy named Nik Caesar. He wasn't the first to draw scenes from prank calls, but he was by far the most consistent and strange.

It wasn't long before Nik began showing up at every live show I did and was drawing several scenes from each show. Whether it involved killer robots, flushing sand down the toilet, fart demons, peeing on doorknobs, mall santas, micro-waves from space, or damaging peoples' cars in the most creative ways possible, Nik would come through with a few pieces of brilliant art at the end of my live shows.

It didn't take long for Nik to branch out to the other prank call shows that he loved, drawing amazing art for all of them and becoming a staple of our prank call community, adding perfect life and color to all of our shows. This book is a showcase of that art, and of the amazing talent that is Nik Caesar and his scary art.

Thank you, Nik, for becoming a part of our community!

- Brad.

Now our phones are some parasitic twin that keeps us connected to everywhere in the planet. We have caller ID, blocking, unlisted this and that, and a lot of us still jump at the ring. As technology grows with phones so does it for the prankers. From now til the end of time someone will call someone and just say “Cactus Cactus”, and the other person will respond with laughter.
